They are frail, destined to return to the dust whence they were taken, liable to decay and fade away as transiently as the tender grass and flowers of the field, or to be borne on rapidly in crowds, as a flooded stream, to the ocean of eternity. Yet, the gloom of this dark picture is enlivened with mercy s beams, flowing from the Sun of Righteousness, the second Adam, who is made a quickening Spirit. The very idea of Moses raising the voice of supplication to God, supposes the rays of mercy, of hope and consolation, had penetrated the dark cloud; for otherwise unmingled darkness and despair must have continued to rest upon the world. It becomes, then, deeply interesting to us all to survey the subject. I. There is a limit affixed to the present existence of our race This is involved in the phrase the days of our years, as also in the uniform language of Scripture. Man, as originally formed in the intellectual and moral image of his Creator, was constituted to continue undecaying,...
