Not illustrated. 1904 edition. Excerpt: .he spent his school-days, where he acquired very early the rudiments of an English education. Superior qualities of mind were early discovered which were encouraged by both parents and teacher. He manifested a fondness for natural his S MIGHT be expected, from the fact of an apparent bent tory as well as for drawing. The latter propensity caused his parents to desire him to become an artist for which he had a remarkable talent, but his rival love for botany and mineralogy prevailed and led him into the pursuit of a different avocation. It was by the appearance in school of an itinerant lecturer one day, who, by the aid of specimen objects spoke on these sciences, that young I-eidy s mind received such an enthusiastic impulse in the prosecution of these studies, that he at once procured text-books on botany and mineralogy and...
